THE TABLET • 18 MARCH 1967

The ordination of older married men to the priesthood who would continue with their secular professions while working part-time as priests was described as “quite possible” by Bishop Zak of Sankt Pölten, Austria, during a recent series of public discussions. It was, however, rather a distant possibility. But the Austrian bishops had already approved the introduction of married deacons ...

Seven out of ten American Catholics want an end to the Church's ban on artificial contraception, according to a survey carried out for Newsweek. The survey ... showed that Catholics felt birth control was the most pressing problem they were faced with. It also found: one Catholic in three used the pill or another means of contraception frowned on by the Church; half opposed the Church's teaching on divorce, with 65 per cent wanting to see the Pope provide annulments allowing remarriage of the innocent party; and 48 per cent believed priests should be allowed to marry.

THE TABLET • 17 MARCH 1917

Our three Anglican contemporaries, the Guardian, the Church Times and the Record, all announced last week that in future their prices would be doubled. We understand that in consequence there is apprehension in some quarters lest the price of THE TABLET should be raised to tenpence.

We hasten to reassure our readers. All newspapers have been passing through a difficult crisis, and the increased cost of paper and printing has added enormously to the expense of production. And there may be harder times still to come. But we have every reason to believe that for the present, and for as far forward as we can see, this journal will continue to shoulder its own burden, and to “carry on” as usual, without making any extra charge.

That we are in a position to do this is due entirely to the splendid way in which the Catholic public, readers and advertisers alike, have rallied to the support of this journal from the very first week of the war.
